

Alexander Henry Quote

Unit: Women (Middle and High School)

Journals of Alexander Henry, fur trader, July 20, 1806

“Several very useful utensils were left among them. I saw the remains of an excellent large corn mill, which the foolish fellows had demolished to barb their arrows; the largest piece of it, which they could not break or work up into any weapon, was fixed to a wooden handle, and used to pound marrow-bones to make grease.”